

How Nomads Make Money on the Road

By Chris Conley

I am a nomad; living, working, and traveling around this great country and loving the nomad lifestyle. I belong to a lot of Facebook groups where I answer questions regarding full-time nomad life and working remotely. I have more than 10 years of remote work experience and I try to help others who are trying to figure out how to earn an income while traveling full-time.

As a full-time nomad for more than three years, the number one question that I get asked is, "How do you make money on the road?" What they really want to know is how they can make money on the road. The good news is, that there are lots of web sites to help people find what works for them, in whatever category they have experience. There is something for everyone, whether you are looking for full-time work, part-time, temp jobs, or even gig jobs.

Most full-time nomads are of retirement age and receive some sort of retirement income. Many nomads have put their time in, working 35 to 40 years and have put money in savings for their retirement years. This leaves them free to travel and explore without concern for a monthly income. But sometimes, the retirement income is not enough and they decide to supplement with a part-time job or a camp host job. Or maybe they just need enough money for bus repairs, so they pick up a side gig for a few weeks.

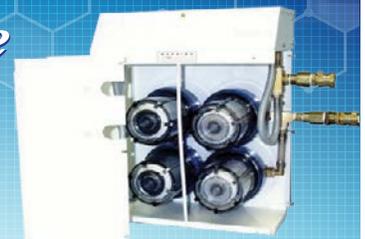

On the other hand, younger nomads, perhaps with no savings, need to find full-time work to fund this adventurous lifestyle. Some people will stay in an area for several months and work a local job or campground job, and other nomads are lucky enough to find remote work that they can do from their converted bus while parked
